The Land of Thunder Dragon

Bhutan is known as the “Land of the Thunder Dragon”, because of the violent thunderstorms that growl over the country's valleys. This is the first country to measure growth and performance through “Gross National Happiness” instead of Gross National Product. Bhutan outlawed tobacco in 2004 and it's a carbon free country. Thimphu, The Capital City of Bhutan has no traffic lights – The city has just white gloved traffic officers and the vehicle horns are very rarely heard. Gangkhar Puensum is the highest mountain in Bhutan. It is so sacred that no one has climbed its peak. The brilliant beauty of Bhutan is contained in the tight embrace of Tibet, China and India. Located in the Eastern Himalayas, Bhutan shares its borders with Tibet in the North, Sikkim and Chumbi Valley of Tibet in the west. Arunachal Pradesh lies in the east and Assam and West Bengal border Bhutan in the South. Bhutan is incidentally, the second least populous nation after the Maldives.

How to Reach BHUTAN

By Air: Bhutan only has one international airport, based in Paro. The domestic airport is found in south central Bhutan (Gelephu Airport). You can catch a flight via Druk Air, which operates direct flights from Kolkata, Delhi, Bangkok, Kathmandu and Dhaka to Paro. The closest airport in India is Bagdogra Airport in West Bengal.

By Road: There are only three borders open to outside tourists, via the road. These are Phuentsholing, Gelephu and Samdrup. You can either take a taxi, bus or any other form of public transportation to cross the border. Phuentsholing is a four to five-hour drive from Bagdogra Airport.

By Train: There are no direct train routes to Bhutan. You'll need to disembark from the train and catch a cab or bus to Bhutan. The most convenient stations are New Alipurduar, Siliguri, Hasimara and New Jalpaiguri station. Hasimara is a mere 20 km from Phuentsholing, while New Alipurduar is 60 km from Jaigaon.

Best time to visit BHUTAN

Bhutan's calendar is filled with different seasons in different regions. You may need to do your research specifically for a particular region. However, January - June & Sept - December is the perfect time to visit Bhutan.

Nature Of BHUTAN

There's a special harmony between the Bhutanese and the land they inhabit. Pristine, lush and beautiful, you'll see great forests, unspoiled valleys, vast fields, rushing rivers and shining lakes. Alpine mountains spear up in the background and the land is rich with 5,500 plant species, 600 orchid species and a variety of medicinal plants. With so much biodiversity, you've got your choice of National Parks and Wildlife Preserves to choose from. Where will you go first? Royal Manas National Park? Jigme Singye Wangchuk National Park? Threshing La National Park? Bumdeling Wildlife Sanctuary? Oh, the choices you can make! Bhutan is generous to wildlife enthusiasts. Not only is the flora and fauna extensive, this is also the land of elephants, tigers, golden langurs, rare species of butterflies, water buffaloes and yaks (which are sometimes kept as pets). The higher reaches of the Himalayas are also home to the elusive and rare snow leopard. Bird watchers will be busy trying to spot any of the 620 species of birds, here. You're going to need to book more than one trip to explore Bhutan's wild side.

Places to visit in BHUTAN

Think of Bhutan as an emerald – it glitters, it's green and it has many facets, many shades at its heart. These shades, these sides, these facets are Bhutan's cities.

Paro – home to some of the oldest Buddhist monasteries and temples.

Paro district also boasts of Bhutan's only international airport.

When in Paro, do as the other tourists do and make a trip to the iconic Paro Taksang monastery – commonly known as the Tiger's Nest Monastery.

Perched, 900 metres high on a cliff, this is a hard trek, but the rewards at the end are worth it.

Thimphu – the capital city. This is the fourth highest capital city in the world, where you'll encounter the cultural hub of Bhutan. Take a trip to Motihang Takin Nature Preserve, where you'll meet the Takin (Bhutan's national animal).

Punakha – the former capital city. This city boasts of the Punthang Dewachen Phodrang (Palace of Great Happiness).

For all the trekkers in the crowd, a visit to Wangdue Phodrang is essential.

On one of your hikes, you'll encounter the nestling grounds of Black-necked cranes and see the famous Gangtey Monastery.

You can also visit Trongsa and Bumthang and Phuentsholing – all of which bloom with Bhutanese stories, beautiful views of the mountains and glorious monasteries.

Nature Of BHUTAN TOURISM

Bhutan's tourism focuses on a "High-Value, Low-Volume" approach, emphasizing cultural immersion and sustainable practices, with a mandatory Sustainable Development Fee (SDF) for foreign visitors and a focus on Gross National Happiness.
